THE STERN-WILSON BOOK OF LAW SCHOOL LISTS

Information On ABA-Approved Law Schools

By

Gerald L. Wilson, Senior Associate Dean at Duke University and Edward M. Stern, Assistant Dean for Pre-Law Advising at Boston University
As Editors of this publication, we continue to try to provide to both prelaw advisors and prelaw students the most current and useful information possible. In the spring of this year we conducted our annual survey of ABA accredited law schools in the United States in order to update these lists of law school academic programs, clinical programs, available scholarships, admission policies and other information. Two notes, both caveats, should be added here. First, this is really a reference book, a ready reference, we hope. Individual schools should be contacted for more information. Second, both advisors and students should be cautious when selecting a law school on the basis of one or just a few factors such as specialized programs, joint-degree programs, salary ranges, student organizations, etc. For the most part, a legal education is a general education in law and specialization occurs after law school. Applicants should look at the total program presented by a law school and see which school in its totality seems to best meet their needs.

We hope that users of this book will also recognize that these lists are compiled from information received from law schools and that they are, to coin a phrase, “subject to change without notice.”

A very special thank you is owed to Rita Callahan Ralston who supervised this project this year. This book could not have been completed without her efforts. The editors are greatly appreciative of her abilities and grace throughout this project.

Please note that the authors do not endorse, support or acknowledge the effectiveness or utility of any commercial test preparation or advising program.

Law School Academic Programs

Some law schools offer graduate work in a general field of law while others have graduate programs in a specific area of the law. A number of law schools have joint degree programs whereby a student may combine his/her legal studies with course work in another discipline. In these cases some of the credits from the law courses will count toward the graduate degree in the other discipline while some of the graduate work will fulfill a part of the law degree. When these programs are available the individual will generally be able to complete the two degrees in a year less than if they were taken separately. A large number of law schools give special emphasis to certain areas of the law but not enough work to warrant a graduate program.

The information on the following pages has been compiled over time and is updated annually from the responses to a questionnaire submitted to the law schools by Dean Edward Stern of Boston University and Dr. Gerald Wilson of Duke University. Again thanks are due to Rita Ralston, who shepherded this year’s project from beginning to end.

Many schools change their programs from one year to another. After finding the special program in which a student is interested, attention should be given to the website and/or the most recent bulletin of that school. Several schools have indicated that a student might be able to work out another joint degree program on an individual basis.

Two notes may be helpful to the reader:

First, when there is an asterisk (*) beside a school, the information came from the ABA · LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools rather than from a response to the Wilson/Stern Survey.

Second, when two asterisks () appear beside a school, the entry applies to graduates of foreign law schools only.

D. AREAS OF EMPHASIS WITHOUT A GRADUATE DEGREE

Advisors and students should note that the primary function of law school curriculum is to offer a general education in law. In most cases, specialization in one area of the law comes with on the job experience after law school. Caution should be exercised in using this list of “Areas of Emphasis” as the primary factor in choosing a law school. Students should also be aware of the possibility that too narrow specialization may limit job opportunities.

This section of the Book of Law School Lists attempts to give a listing of areas in which clinical programs are offered. Given the great variety of clinical programs and the even greater variety of titles given to these programs, we believe that it is more useful to simply identify areas. Often these clinical programs assume the form of internships or externships. Specific details about each program can be found in individual law school bulletins or in the ABA-LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools.

Two notes may be helpful to the reader:

First, where there is an asterisk (*) beside a school, the information came from the ABA-LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools rather than from a response to the Wilson/Stern survey.

Second, the list concludes with a category simply called “Various.” Resisting the temptation to label it “Miscellaneous,” the editors listed schools which indicate that they have clinical programs but did not offer specific information. In many of these cases, clinical programs are arranged individually according to the needs of the student and the opportunities available. Students and advisors should examine information provided individually by these schools.

A. PRO BONO WORK REQUIREMENT/PUBLIC SERVICE REQUIREMENT

Albany Law Schools: Yes. Albany Law’s pro bono requirement mirrors that of the New York State Bar requirement for admission. All students must undertake at least 50 hours of law-related service over the course of three years. Pro bono activity is robust at Albany Law and programs include animal law, human trafficking, prisoner rights, child advocacy, civil rights, elder law, LGBT rights, veterans rights and many more.

Appalachian School of Law: The Externship requirement (three credit hours) allows students to apply the skills learned in the core curriculum. Students typically take this course during the summer following their first year of studies at the Law School. Students work for a total of approximately 225 unpaid hours in a judges’ chambers, public law office, or public interest organization under the direct supervision of a licensed attorney.

University of Arkansas School of Law: No. While not required, students who achieve 50 or more hours of pro bono work receive recognition at graduation and a designation on their transcripts.

Baylor Law School: While not required, Baylor Law encourages students to participate in pro bono and public service work while in law school. Students may opt to participate in our formal Pro Bono and Public Service Program by submitting an Intent to participate form and completing the requisite number of hours of pro bono and public service work during their time in law school. There are 5 tiers to the program: Pro Bono Pledge Completed (50 hours at graduation), Bronze (75 hours at graduation), Silver (150 at graduation), Gold (200 hours at graduation), and Platinum/designation as a Public Interest Fellow (224 hours at graduation plus required coursework).

Boston University School of Law encourages students to join the Pro Bono Program, which gives students the opportunity to dedicate their developing legal skills to unmet legal needs in the Boston area, throughout the United States and around the world. Through the Pro Bono Program, J.D. student provide 50 hours of law-related service during their three years at BU Law (LL.M. students provide 12 hours) to organizations dedicated to underrepresented groups and or social issues. Upon completion, students receive a notation on their law school transcripts confirming participation in the program.

University at Buffalo School of Law: The School of Law is prepared to help students who plan to sit for the New York Bar exam to meet the state’s mandatory 50-hour pro bono admission requirement. The School provides for-credit pro bono opportunities, and will identify not-for-credit opportunities available in the Western New York region. The School’s highly-competitive Pro Bono Scholars Program gives third-year law students the opportunity to take the February New York State Bar before they graduate, then work full-time in a pro bono placement while taking one course for their final semester of law school. The School’s Buffalo Public Interest Law Program raises money to support students who work in the public interest each summer during law school. BPILP also hosts networking events for students to meet public-interest employers from neighboring communities. The organization is affiliated with Lawyers for Learning and participates in the Student Bar Association’s Volunteer Service Days.

University of California—Davis

The Pro Bono Program
This is a certificate program designed to enhance our educational process. Pro bono work is volunteer legal work performed without compensation or academic credit and under the supervision of an attorney. Students can volunteer in public interest organizations, government agencies or courts.

Participation in the program also provides students recognition for their community service; upon completion of 50 or more hours of pro bono work, students receive a Pro Bono Program certificate.

Public Service Law Program
The Public Service Law Program is an academic certification program developed for students seeking public service careers. Students are eligible to enroll at any time throughout law school but are encouraged to enroll in soon after registering for an approved course or obtaining a qualifying position. Certificate requirements include academic and experiential components. To receive a certificate, students must fulfill the academic and experiential components of the program.

University of California—Irvine
The University of California, Irvine School of Law is deeply committed to the performance of public service work. We expect that our students and faculty will be regularly engaged in public service work throughout their careers.

Public service work, of course, can take many forms and reflect many values, including activities such as helping those who cannot afford legal services and working for public interest and government organizations. We encourage our students and faculty to set yearly public service goals similar to those expected of practicing attorneys.
Cardozo School of Law
Cardozo has a wide variety of opportunities for students to be involved in pro bono projects. Public service work is an integral part of the fabric of the Cardozo community. Cardozo does not have mandatory pro bono requirements, though the New York bar requires 50 hours of pro bono work to be eligible for admission to the bar.

Case Western Reserve University
Encourages all law students to participate in pro bono work and recognizes those who complete a minimum of 50 qualifying pro bono hours by April 1 of their 3L year. To qualify, Pro Bono Work must be (1) law related; (2) supervised or approved by an attorney; (3) provided to the client free of charge or at a substantially reduced rate; (4) uncompensated and not for credit; and (5) provided to underrepresented persons, interest, or communities on behalf of a not-profit or government organization. Recognition will include a certificate signed by the Dean; an annual recognition event for graduating students who have satisfied the pro bono hours minimum requirement; and, recognition in the Commencement program. The graduating student(s) who complete the greatest number of qualifying pro bono hours will receive the Pro Bono Graduating Student of the Year Award and recognition at the Commencement ceremony.

Catholic University of America
The Columbus School of Law encourages students to engage in pro bono work through the CUA Law Pro Bono Challenge. CSL students pledge to complete 2550, or 75+ hours of pro bono service during their law school tenure and are recognized accordingly at an annual reception and upon graduation.

Charleston School of Law
Regardless of a student’s path after graduation, part of the Charleston School of Law’s mission is to instill in students the value of public service. Students at the Charleston School of Law are required to perform 50 hours of pro bono work under the supervision of a licensed attorney before graduation. Generally, students will receive pro bono credit when a student performs law related work without pay or academic credit for a public interest attorney or for a private attorney when he or she has taken a case on a pro bono or appointed basis. A public interest attorney is an attorney employed by an organization that is educational, charitable, governmental or nonprofit in nature. At a minimum, tenure and non-tenure track faculty must meet the school’s institutional pro bono requirement.

University of Colorado
University of Colorado encourages pro bono activities by a voluntary Public Service Pledge program. Students who complete 50 hours of law-related public service work in law school will be recognized at graduation and work will be reflected on transcript.

Columbia University: Every candidate for a J.D. degree must devote 40 hours to public interest field work between the start of the second year of law school and the end of the third year as a prerequisite for graduation. Work will qualify if it is uncompensated (financially or by academic credit), public interest or public service law-related work, broadly defined and regardless of political orientation.

Concordia University School of Law: Yes. “Servant leadership” is one of the founding principles behind Concordia University School of Law. To that end, our students are not only encouraged to provide numerous hours of pro bono work, it is mandatory. And while the requirement is for each student to complete 50 hours of law-related public service prior to graduation, the vast majority go well past that minimum number of hours. Through community service, students hone their skills by giving back to people in need. Serving the underserved is what Concordia University School of Law is all about.

Cornell University
The Public Interest Law Union and the Office of Public Service can help you start building your commitment to pro bono service during law school. The purpose of the Public Service Challenge is to provide school-wide recognition of Cornell Law Students who devote time to public service activities. Students who participate in the Public Service Challenge will receive a Certificate from Dean Stewart Schwab upon each level of completion.

University of Denver
Public Interest
50 hours during law school tenure

DePaul College of Law recognizes the intrinsic value of pro bono and community service work and is committed to shaping lawyers with a lifelong commitment to pro bono work and serving others. Thus, while not required, DePaul College of Law encourages all students to complete and report at least 50 hours of service during their time at DePaul. Students who meet this 50-hour aspirational goal qualify for a prestigious service award presented at a reception in the spring.

University of District of Columbia School of Law
Through Duke University’s Pro Bono Project, students provide volunteer legal services in individual areas of interest. While not required, participation is strongly encouraged.

Duke University: Public Interest and Public Service Certificate: The Certificate in Public Interest and Public Service Law (“PIPS” Certificate) is a JD Certificate program for students committed to a legal career in public service. Enrolled students complete curricular requirements and are assigned peer and faculty mentors in order to assist them in selecting academic, clinical and experiential courses that will help them develop competencies necessary toward achieving their professional aspirations. Students in the program benefit from a community of peers, faculty, administrators and Duke Law alumni committed to supporting them as they pursue careers in public interest and public service.

Pro Bono Pledge: participation in the Pro Bono Project is voluntary but all students are encouraged to participate. Students are invited to sign the Pro Bono Pledge in which they commit to contribute a minimum of 50 hours of law-related community service, including pro bono or clinic field work, during their time as students.

Florida State does have a pro bono requirement. Students must fulfill 20 hours of pro bono/public service work during the second or third year of law school.

Georgetown University Law Center encourages students to participate in pro bono activities through the Pro Bono Challenge. Students who perform at least 75 hours of law-related pro bono work during their years at Georgetown are recognized at Graduation.

Georgia State University: To encourage and support students who provide pro bono services to the community, the College of Law has adopted the Georgia State University College of Law Pro Bono Recognition Program. Pro bono activities include not only those that ensure adequate legal services for moderate and low income individuals but efforts that enhance the capacity of law and legal institutions to do justice, and activities in the local community that promote justice. The College of Law’s pro bono recognition program is designed to encouraged students to engage in such activities while in law school and thus conduct themselves in accordance with highest values and standards of the legal profession.

Hamline University School of Law has a pro bono service requirement of 24 hours over the course of law school.

Harvard University has a pro bono requirement of 50 hours over the course of law school. On average, students complete approximately 600 hours of pro bono work before they graduate.

The University of Hawaii | William S. Richardson School of Law: Except for transfer students, law students who enroll in the William
S. Richardson School of Law must complete 60 hours of law-related pro bono legal service, including law-related public service activities, as a graduation requirement. Transfer students must complete a total of 10 hours of pro bono legal service, including law-related service activities, for every semester enrolled in the William S. Richardson School of Law.

The Maurice A. Deane School of Law—Hofstra University offers students opportunities to engage in pro bono service on a not-forcredit basis. The Public Service Certificate Program provides students the opportunity to volunteer with nonprofit organizations, governmental agencies and private law firms, or practitioners doing pro bono work. Students who participate receive a certificate from Hofstra Law recognizing their public service. The student-run Unemployment Action Center is a nonprofit corporation that offers free advice and representation to persons denied unemployment benefits.

The University of Idaho College of Law is committed to providing opportunities for law students that emphasize the value and habit of service to the community. Accordingly, all students are required to perform 40 hours of uncompensated law-related pro bono service as a condition of graduation. The purpose of this pro bono requirement is to instill in students a commitment to their responsibility as lawyers to give back to the community and promote justice by assisting the underserved and underrepresented. As a result of the program, students gain practical legal experience, clients are served, and legal service providers gain valuable assistance. Students are given the opportunity to fulfill their public service requirements in a wide range of settings, including legal service organizations, government agencies, private firms (pro bono cases), non-profits, and legislative offices.

The Pro Bono Project at Indiana University Maurer School of Law is a cooperative program between the Law School and the bar and bench of the surrounding area to provide civil legal assistance to people who could not otherwise afford it. Students are assigned to work closely with volunteer lawyer on a wide variety of matters. The school has established an aspirational goal of 60 hours of pro bono service for students during their time in law school.

Indiana University McKinney School of Law encourages students to take part in our Pro Bono Program, where you’ll gain valuable hands-on experience while helping some of society’s most underrepresented populations. Students who complete at least 50 hours of pro bono work during the course of their law school career will receive a Pro Bono notion on their transcript, receive a certificate, and participate in a recognition reception at the conclusion of their law school career. These students will also be listed in the graduation program as a participant in the Pro Bono Program.

The John Marshall Law School: There is not a specific pro bono requirement. However, students are required to complete at least three credit hours of clinical or externship work, both of which normally involve public service or pro bono work. Simulation courses do not satisfy this requirement.

University of Kansas: No Pro Bono requirement, but students are recognized for pro bono achievements.
Lewis & Clark Law School does not mandate pro bono or community service hours. However, for students who have volunteered 30 hours a year in either pro bono or community service are awarded with the “Pro Bono and Community Service Award,” in the spring of every year and this award is also reflected on the student’s academic transcript. Students may earn this award for every year in which they are an enrolled student.

Liberty University School of Law: Liberty University School of Law has a long tradition of expecting and encouraging community service from its students in keeping with its mission “to affirm the Christian worldview and provide a practical expression of God’s love for mankind.” The law school does not mandate volunteerism; however, it is working to develop a culture of service among the law students, faculty, staff, and administration.

LMU Loyola Law School—Los Angeles mandates 40 hours public service work beginning entering class of Fall 94 and thereafter.

The University of Louisville—Brandeis School of Law has a pro bono/public service requirement. After completion of their first year and before their final semester of law school, students must perform a minimum of 30 hours of uncompensated public service work. Institutional support is provided in the form of a half-time director and a half-time assistant who help students in meeting this requirement by having over 300 locations identified as well as assisting students in establishing other locations according to their individual interest.

University of Maine School of Law’s faculty has adopted a voluntary student pro bono legal service standard under which every student is encouraged to provide a minimum of 80 hours of pro bono legal service prior to the time of graduation.

“Pro bono legal service” is defined as work involving the provision of legal services that is performed without either financial compensation or academic credit.

Examples include such work for legal services providers, individual lawyers providing pro bono service, social service agencies, low income organizations, civil rights organizations, environmental organizations, consumer organizations, and governmental agencies providing service to individual members of the public who are disadvantaged. Partisan political activity is not included in the definition of “pro bono legal services.” Students achieving 80 hours are recognized at graduation.

University of Maryland requires full-time day students to complete a public service requirement by taking one of a number of credit bearing courses in which students have substantial responsibility for providing legal assistance to poor persons or organizations representing the interest of poor persons. These courses:

a) provide students with an experience (including direct professional contact with poor persons) on how the law operates in practice; and

b) include regular classes in which the faculty member provides instruction that, when integrated with the practice experience, will help the students to understand, apply and critique theory and practice; and

c) have a professional responsibility component.

University of Memphis Law School is committed to instill within its students the very heart of the legal profession — providing equal justice under the law. Because equal justice comes at a cost, lawyers have a unique and rewarding obligation to provide pro bono services to those unable to pay. Memphis Law’s Pro Bono Program is designed to nurture this ethical obligation and provide students with the opportunity to gain a practical, hands-on experience while helping improve the lives of the under-represented. Students are required to complete 40 hours of pro bono work in order to graduate.

University of Miami School of Law: There is no pro-bono requirement for graduation. However, Students who complete at least 75 hours of pro bono service while in law school will be recognized with an honor cord at graduation and will receive transcript notation.

University of Michigan Law School asks students to voluntarily commit to performing 50 hours of pro bono service while enrolled at Michigan Law, allowing students to connect their developing knowledge to the world outside the Law School and gaining valuable legal skills while helping an organization in our community meet the needs of underrepresented individuals. Students may choose from Law School-organized projects (ranging from those that provide legal assistance to local residents to projects that spotlight events across the nation and around the globe), or may organize their own projects. Graduating students performing at least 50 hours of pro bono work will receive a Certificate of Pro Bono Service from the Dean, recognition at an annual pro bono banquet, and acknowledgment during the Honors Convocation.

University of Missouri—Kansas City: We do have a pro bono service program.

University of Nebraska seeks to encourage and recognize volunteer legal service by second and third year students through the Pro Bono Initiative. Students completing 40 hours or more of approved, qualified pro bono work during their second and/or third years will receive a Dean’s certificate upon graduation.
New England Law | Boston: Pro bono opportunities are available to students, but are not required for graduation. Students engaged in volunteer public service legal work have two opportunities to earn recognition for their work. The first is New England Law’s own Public Service Transcript Notation Program, which gives qualifying students formal recognition on their law school transcript as well as the school’s Public Service Honor Roll. The second is the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court Pro Bono Honor Roll, which recognizes law students across Massachusetts who complete qualifying pro bono work.

University of Nevada, Las Vegas—William S. Boyd School of Law requires first-year students to participate in a community service program in which teams of students, working with Legal Aid Center of Southern Nevada prepare and conduct weekly workshops for unrepresented people on basic procedures in family or small claims court and on basic landlord/tenant law and bankruptcy law.

New York Law School: Applicants seeking to be admitted to the New York State bar on or after January 1, 2015 will need to demonstrate that they have completed 50 hours of qualifying pro bono work prior to submitting their applications for admission.

University of North Carolina: The Pro Bono Program tracks the number of hours completed by each law student in order to recognize outstanding pro bono service. Students completing fifty of more hours of pro bono service receive a letter from the Director of the Pro Bono Program and the Dean of the law school acknowledging the contribution they have made to our community. Those who do more than seventy-five hours of pro bono service while a law student are recognized by the North Carolina Bar Association at the public service reception held at the end of each school year in the law school Rotunda. Furthermore, students who complete one hundred or more hours of pro bono service are individually acknowledged at law school graduation. Students completing 50 or more hours during their law school career will receive special notations on their official transcripts.

Northeastern University School of Law: We have public interest requirement. This requirement can be fulfilled through a public interest Co-Op, completing a public interest clinical offering, completed 30 hours of uncompensated legal work in a public interest setting, or an independent study project of at least 3 credits. A majority of students fulfill this requirement through a public interest co-op.

Northern Illinois University College of Law: We do not have a pro bono requirement, but we encourage students to participate in pro bono projects, we offer a public interest certificate, and provide recognition for students who engage in 60 hours or more of pro bono work.

Northern Kentucky University Chase College of Law requires all students to complete 50 hours of pro bono service during their law school tenure. Students may satisfy the hourly requirement at one placement site, or may satisfy the requirement with several different projects involving fewer than 50 hours, so long as they ultimately complete a total of 50 hours of pro bono service. Fifty (50) hours is a minimum requirement; students are encouraged to perform additional hours if they so choose.

Northwestern University: We expect all students to complete at least 40 hours of community service work during their J.D. degrees.

The Nova Southeastern University College of Law Pro Bono Honor Program recognizes students who work pro bono for the public interest while enrolled in law school. Students completing a certain number of service hours will be awarded this graduation honor. The program is part of the Public Interest Law Center, which provides information and resources to students interested in working for the public interest and acknowledges that work.

Quinnipiac Law does not have a “pro-bono” requirement for graduation, although some of our experiential learning courses do involve providing pro-bono services, doing so is not mandatory.

The University of Pennsylvania Carey Law School aims to promote an ethic of service in all students while encouraging them to develop professional skills and enhance their legal education. The centerpiece of Penn Law’s pledge to service is a graduation obligation of 70 hours of pro bono legal work. As the hub of public interest activities at Penn Law, the Toll Public Interest Center coordinates a wide range of pro bono initiatives, including internal pro bono projects and the many external opportunities that students pursue. or Penn Law students, pro bono opportunities are limitless. Students can participate in more than 30 pro bono projects (internal opportunities) or partner with non-profit or government agencies for pro bono internships (external opportunities).

Roger Williams University School of Law—requires all students to complete 50 hours of law-related public service over the course of their J.D. Program.

Rutgers Law School: The Pro Bono Program places students in a wide variety of public interest or public service law offices where students perform a minimum of 35 hours of service. The program is voluntary.

St. John’s University School of Law: The Pro Bono Scholars Program allows students to sit for the bar exam in February of their final semester and then complete 12 weeks of full-time pro bono service at an approved clinic. Students receive 14 credits for the semester.
Saint Louis University School of Law does not have a pro bono or public service requirement, however, students are strongly encouraged to participate in pro bono legal service prior to graduation. Pro bono work may be on behalf of a government agency, a non-profit organization or indigent individuals.

University of St. Thomas School of Law (MN): As a requirement for graduation, all students must complete fifty hours of public service during their three years of law school.

St. Thomas University requires its law students complete a minimum of 50 hours of pro bono work as a requirement for graduation. It is designed to give second and third year students legal experience under the supervision of lawyers in a variety of non-profit offices, government agencies, and law firms.

Santa Clara University: Students seeking to earn the Public Interest Law Certificate must complete 50 hours of community volunteer work promoting public interest and social justice.

Seattle University School of Law invites all law students to pledge to complete at least 100 hours for full-time students or 50 hours for part-time students of legal pro bono and community volunteer work before they graduate.

University of South Carolina: While many members of the school are actively involved in the pro-bono program, this is not a graduation requirement. More information can be found at: https://www.sc.edu/study/colleges_schools/law/internal/department/pro_bono/student/sc_bar_pro_bono_program.php. The program has been active for 30 years, and was the first entirely voluntary pro bono program housed at a law school in the country.

South Texas College of Law: The College’s Pro Bono Honors Program seeks to encourage professionalism both by providing pro bono public service opportunities for students and by recognizing this service through a formal certificate program. Students enrolled in this voluntary certificate program must perform at least 50 service hours at a pre-approved placement or seek approval for an alternative placement from the program director.

SMU Dedman School of Law requires all students entering the J.D. Program in the Fall of 1993 or thereafter to complete 30 hours of work in approved law-related public service placements.

Stanford Law School: Students should volunteer at least 50 hours of law-related pro bono work without compensation or academic credit before graduation. Students who complete 50 hours of pro bono work during their law school career will graduate with Pro Bono Distinction.

Stetson University College of Law: As a requirement for graduation, each student must complete 60 hours of public service.

Syracuse University College of Law Recognition for Pro Bono and Community Service: In recognition of the commitment to pro bono and community service work by students of the Syracuse University College of Law, the following recognition program has been created. Students who are in good academic standing and have completed at least 30 hours of pro bono and community service will receive special recognition at graduation. There are two categories of Pro Bono and Community Service Recognition Awards.

Blue Pro Bono Community Service Award: (complete the recommended 30 hours of service) Orange Pro Bono and Community Service Award: (exceed the recommended 30 hours of service by at least 1 full our).

In addition, the top three graduating students providing the most pro bono and community service hours shall be individually recognized.

Temple University Beasley School of Law: While Temple Law does not have a pro-bono requirement for graduation, our students typically engage in ample amounts of pro-bono work throughout their law school experience.

Texas A&M University School of Law: Each student must perform no less than thirty hours of pro bono work through a placement that has been pre-approved by the School of Law. The pro bono work may be commenced following the completion of the first year of law school, and must be completed prior to graduation. The student is responsible for selecting a placement, contacting that office, arranging to do the work, completing the work, and filling out all proper forms. The work must be law related; clerical work is appropriate only to the extent needed to carry out the overall legal task. The work must be uncompensated; students may not receive monetary compensation, academic credit, or other tangible benefits for performing the service. The work must be supervised by an attorney.

Thomas R. Kline School of Law, Drexel University: Every student must complete at least 50 hours of pro bono service prior to graduation. Students who provide 75+ hours of pro bono service receive recognition at graduation.

Touro Law Center: As a condition of graduation, every student must satisfy the Public Interest Law Perspective Requirement by successful completion of certain clinical programs or classroom courses or by certification of 40 hours of pro bono work.
Tulane Law School was the first in the country to institute a mandatory pro bono or a community service program. Since 1987, Tulane has required each graduating student to have performed 20 hours of supervised, uncompensated legal work for clients who could not otherwise afford assistance. In 2006 requirement was increased to 30 hours.

Valparaiso University School of Law adopted a pro bono requirement in 1988. Valparaiso law students must perform 40 hours of pro bono work supervised by an attorney. Students must complete the work after completion of 30 credit hours and prior to graduation. If 60 hours or more are completed, it will be noted on the student’s transcript.

University of Washington requires each student to complete 60 hours of public service legal work.

Washburn University School of Law: believes the legal profession is one of service and encourages students to participate in its Pro Bono Certificate Program to demonstrate a commitment to serving the community and to gain enhanced, practical legal experience. Students who perform 50 hours of pro bono service receive a Pro Bono Honors designation at graduation, and students who complete 100 hours of pro bono service receive a Distinguished Pro Bono Honors designation. The Washburn Law Pro Bono Program encourages students to understand and embrace their future professional obligation to provide legal services to individuals of limited means.

Washington University School of Law: Students are encouraged to participate in a Pro Bono Pledge and fulfill 50 hours of pro bono work before graduation. Our Public Service Advisory Board helps individual find service projects that are tailored to their interests. We have long-standing institutional connections with many organizations throughout the larger St. Louis community and beyond.

Western New England University School of Law: Students are required to complete 20 hours of pro bono work.

Western State College of Law has a voluntary Public Service Program in which students use their legal skills to perform law-related work for the community and the underprivileged and are recognized for that work upon completing 40 hours of service.

Widener University Commonwealth Law School: Provides a special recognition at graduation for law students who perform a minimum of 60 hours of pro bono work over the course of their J.D. career.

Widener University Delaware Law School provides a special recognition at graduation for law students who perform a minimum of sixty hours of pro bono work over the course of the JD career.

William Mitchell College of Law: Provides a wide variety of volunteer options through the Minnesota Justice Foundations. Students who serve 50 or more hours through MJF or clinics receive a transcript certification.

Yale Law School has no Pro Bono Requirement.
This section of the Book of Law School Lists contains a summary of specialized law school publications open for student participation. In addition to the scholarly specialized publications listed in the next few pages, many law schools publish newspapers, newsletters and yearbooks. In most cases these are entirely student run.

Further information about these publications can be obtained by examining the individual school’s website and/or the school's most recent bulletin or by consulting the ABA · LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools. Where designated by an asterisk (*), the information came from the Official Guide rather than a response to the Wilson/Stern survey.

3. Angela D. Dales Merit Scholarship Program for first-year students:
   • Merit Scholarships are awarded in the form of a credit against the tuition charged to the student who receives the award.
   • Eligibility for an award during the student’s first year of Law School is determined based on the student’s Law School Admissions Test (LSAT) score and undergraduate grade point average (UGPA) as determined by LSAC. Eligibility for retention of an award during the student’s second and third years is determined based on the student’s academic performance during Law School.
   • The Law School is able to award only a limited number of these scholarships, and scholarships will be awarded on a first-come, first-served basis. Applicants therefore are encouraged to complete their Law School application at the earliest possible date. An award is not finalized until the applicant has been accepted to the Law School and has paid his or her seat deposit.
   • Transfer students are not eligible for Merit Scholarships.

Temple University Beasley School of Law

1. Non-need Based Scholarships for Entering Students:
   Temple awards a number of scholarships based on merit, need and a combination of both, so it is difficult to separate the factors which go into the selection process and to provide specific information on the number of awards made in a specific academic year. Incoming students are eligible for a number of merit and need scholarships ranging from partial to full-time tuition. The faculty Admissions Committee makes recommendations for merit scholarship awards and student are not required to submit a separate application. The one exception is the Rubin-Public Interest Scholars Program which provides full and half tuition scholarships to student who will be pursuing a public interest legal career.

   Both Day and Evening division students are considered for numerous scholarships based on a variety of factors including academic performance, financial need and contributions to the law community.

B. SCHOOLS OFFERING A SUMMER CONDITIONAL ADMISSION PROGRAM

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

University of Arkansas—Little Rock

Summer Conditional Admissions Program Description: Legal Education Advancement Project (LEAP) participants attend an immersive, six-week summer program at the UA Little Rock William H. Bowen School of Law. Participants are assigned a faculty advisor, engage in collaborative exercises, and take a non-credit course that requires considerable in-class and out-of-class work. Classes and activities are required all day Monday through Friday. LEAP is a full-time commitment and working during the program is prohibited.

Atlanta's John Marshall Law School

Access to Law School Opportunity Program (ALSO): ALSO is designed to allow participants to demonstrate that their performance in college, the LSAT or both do not reflect their capability to succeed in law school. An applicant's performance in the program will be considered with the balance of his or her application for the purpose of making an admission decision.

Campbell Law School

Approximately 50–75 students are given the opportunity to participate in our seven week performance-based admission program (P BAP). The students take two courses of three credit hours each. A final exam is given in each course. A student who receives a “B” in both courses is automatically admitted to the fall program. Students who do not meet this criteria, but who demonstrate potential for success in law school, will be placed on a waiting list for the fall program.

Concordia University School of Law

Concordia University School of Law offers an Admission by Performance (ABP) option, an innovative program designed to give promising law school candidates a different path to law school. When offered, the program is available to a limited number of applicants who show promise of success, but whose credentials might not qualify them for standard admission. Applicants accepted into the program have the opportunity to gain admission for the next available start term via their performance in a pair of four-week, no-credit courses - Introduction to Legal Discourse and Analysis, and Introduction to Contracts via online/live-streaming. Each course consists of eight three-hour class periods, followed by a final exam. Once the grading for each course is completed, the Admission Committee will meet to determine which students are to be admitted as J.D. candidates for the fall term. For more information, contact the Office of Admission at 208-639-5440 or lawadmission@cu-portland.edu.

University of Detroit Mercy

An 8 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Legal Writing and Criminal Law. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Approximately 20 students generally participate. The Special Summer Program (SSP) is operated for minority, disadvantaged, or disabled applicants who do not meet the minimum standards of the entering class, but show potential for the study of law. SSP applicants must have at least one LSAT score in the 15th percentile. Question 13 of the application asks the applicant if he/she would like to be considered for the SSP. In a separate statement, applicants must describe the circumstances that qualify him/her for the SSP. In case of a disability, the applicant is requested to provide documentation. To be eligible for matriculation in the fall, students of the program must pass the substantive criminal law course, pass the legal research and writing course, and receive the unanimous evaluation of the SSP faculty. The cost of the program is $500 for tuition and $18 for parking. The contact person for the program is Kimberly Jones, Director of Admissions, joneski@udmercy.edu.
University of the District of Columbia

A 3 week summer conditional admission program. Required classes are Legal Writing, Reasoning and Analysis (class and tutorials); Torts and Criminal Law or Contracts. Students do not receive credit for the summer classes. Approximately 8 to 16 students participate. Criteria for admission into the program varies, usually the LSAT and/or GPA are below the “accepted” numerical standards or the student’s writing or organizational skills may be of concern and below what is deemed acceptable. There is no special application procedure. The student must attend every class and complete every assignment and exam in order to meet the condition of his or her admission into the fall class. At the end of the program each student is provided with an evaluation of his or her performance in the program; they are also counseled about their progress and about areas in which they may need to improve. If appropriate the program director recommends that students participate in the Academic Support Program. There is no cost to the student for participating in the program. The contact person for the program is Associate Dean Laurie Morin, Academic Affairs; she can be reached at lmorin@udc.edu.

Florida Coastal School of Law

The Alternative Admission Model Program for Legal Education (AAMPLE®) is a performance-based admissions program that rewards students who demonstrate the desire, commitment, and level of achievement necessary to manage the rigors of law school. Students are required to take two law school courses selected from our regular law school curriculum and modified to provide the most accurate indication of a student’s potential for law school success. Students may choose to take the courses on-campus or online. Within each course, students will take two quizzes and a final exam. Students who successfully pass each course with a 2.5 GPA or higher are automatically accepted into the school's Juris Doctor program. Florida Coastal offers the AAMPLE program twice a year- once in the summer for admission to our fall class and once in the fall for admission to our spring class. For more information, please contact Nicole Schumer, Assistant Director of Admissions, at nschumer@fcsl.edu.

Indiana University McKinney School of Law

McKinney School of Law participates in the Indiana Conference of Legal Education Opportunity (ICLEO). ICLEO is a state based program that helps minority, low income, or educationally disadvantaged college graduates pursue a law degree and a career in the Indiana legal community. The students selected participate in the 6 week ICLEO Summer Institute. The housing and course materials are provided and there is no tuition to participate. Students who successfully complete the program are certified as ICLEO Fellows and receive an annual stipend of $9,000 for up to 3 years upon enrolling in an Indiana law school. There is a separate application and selection process. For more information, please visit mckinneylaw.edu/admissions/jd/diversity.html.

Louisiana State University

Legal Methods course, successful completion, admission for Fall. Must have approval of Faculty Committee to enter summer program.

University of Louisville—Brandeis School of Law

Approximately 15 applicants given the opportunity to participate in a six-week course (Monday through Friday) designed to enhance their skills in order to improve their chances for success in law school. All who complete the work in a satisfactory (effort and performance are evaluated) manner are allowed to enter law school in the fall. Most, if not all, of the participants successfully matriculate each fall.
University of Memphis

To help achieve diversity in the classroom, during the summer the University of Memphis School of Law operates the Tennessee Institute for Pre-Law (TIP) program. The TIP program is for Tennessee residents (and Border County residents) who are not admitted through the regular admissions process, but who show potential for the study of law and bring diversity to the class. Applicants who are admitted into TIP and successfully complete the summer program will be eligible for admission in the fall semester to the University of Memphis School of Law. The TIP portion of the application requests information on whether a student is a first-generation college graduate, foreign-born, or a first-generation U.S. citizen; whether a student is a graduate of a historically minority undergraduate institution; whether a student has a disability; or whether a student is or was economically disadvantaged. The required TIP supplemental statement asks the student to describe the circumstances that qualify the student for participation in the program and the way in which the student might contribute to diversity in the law school.

New York Law School

New York Law School offers an online 6-week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes: Fourth Amendment and Negotiable Instruments. Students do receive credit for the classes. Twenty seats are reserved in the program for those seeking admission to New York Law School. The admissions committee invites selected students to participate in the program. There is no special application procedure. In order for the student to matriculate into law school in the fall, the criteria are: 1) satisfactory participation, (2) no grade below a C in either class, and (3) a cumulative GPA of 2.5. This year, the program cost was $3500, but this figure is subject to change in the future. The contact person for the program is Ella Mae Estrada, Assistant Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid, ellamae.estrada@nyls.edu, 212.431.2888.

North Carolina Central University School of Law

Students selected to participate in the Performance-Based Admission Program (PBAP) spend two weeks in a classroom setting where they are given instruction in one substantive law course by experienced faculty members. Additionally, students learn basic skills: how to prepare for class; how to organize and outline course material; and how to answer legal questions. Applicants are evaluated through diagnostic testing, oral and written assignments and interviews. These evaluations determine whether the PBAP applicant will be admitted to the School of Law in the fall.

Nova Southeastern University

AAMPLE®, a six-week summer program with limited enrollment by invitation of the Admissions Committee. Students take two non-credit courses and are required to earn a specified GPA to guarantee admission for fall. Additional full-file review, including feedback from AAMPLE® faculty, is given to those just below required GPA. Cost of the program is approximately $1,700 and it is not eligible for financial aid. Contact HYPERLINK “mailto:law-admission@nova.edu” law-admission@nova.edu or 954.262.6119 for more information.

University of Oklahoma

The 1LS (First-year Law Summer Start) Program is a summer program for a select group of admitted students that runs from late May to mid-July. The focus of the 1LS Program is to give a first look at law school and provide the opportunity to earn law school credits during the summer. Students will take a course typically offered in the fall of their first year of law school, and a Legal Methods class. Students participating in the 1LS Program benefit from the opportunity to begin law school early and lighten their course and final exam loads for the Fall semester.

Oklahoma City University

Two pass/fail courses.

Saint Louis University

The Summer Institute at Saint Louis University is designed to identify students who have experienced the effects of educational disadvantage. The Institute includes a substantive first semester course and a course in legal skills. The program lasts seven weeks, beginning in late May/early June and ending in mid-July. Students who successfully complete this program are accepted into the School of Law for the Fall semester. Limited to 25 students. Tuition and books are free.
Additional Useful Information

St. Mary's University
A 5 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes, Logic & Writing and Analytical Skills. Between 15–20 students participate in the program. They are recommended by the Admissions Committee from the general applicant pool, and selected by the Program Director. There is no special application procedure. In order to matriculate into law school in the fall, the student must be recommended for admission by the professors conducting the summer program after completion. The cost of the program is $2,000 for day students and $1,500 for evening students, subject to change.

St. Thomas University School of Law
Admitted students have the option, or are required to enroll in a two week course prior to entering their 1L year. Introduction to Legal Studies (ILS) gives students the opportunity to experience how a law school classroom is conducted, while also introducing them to the format and setting of the law school exam.

Seattle University School of Law
Seattle University School of Law: 7 week required attendance in the Access Admission Program. All students are considered full members of the entering class and guaranteed admission in fall.

University of South Dakota
A 6 week screening program which will yield 10 admits. Between 30–50 students participate in the program. Students are required to take two classes, Agency and Personal Property. Students are selected based on a completed file that is eligible to begin law school that fall; usually the only concern is in the numbers, either a low LSAT and/or GPA. Applicants cannot apply for the program; they are invited to participate after review of the law school application and supporting material. During the final week of the program, participants take an exam in each course, anonymously. The two exam scores are averaged, and those who have a minimum grade of 70 (mid-C) on EACH exam, AND whose scores rank in the top ten of the program are offered admission. The cost of the program is $1,000 plus books, and room & board. The contact person for the program is Jean Henriques, Admissions Officer, jhenriqu@usd.edu.

Syracuse University
A 3 week, summer program called Legal Education Opportunity Program (LEO) that is not a conditional admission program, but a program that provides and opportunity for students who may not have otherwise been offered admission. Students are required to take three classes, Introduction to Law and the Legal System, Legal Writing Workshop, and Legal Skills. Students do not receive credit for the classes. Between 20–30 students usually participate in the LEO program. Recognizing that numerical indicators are not always the best predictors of success in law school—even when considered in combination with other factors—the College of Law admits a limited number of students each year through the LEO program. There is no special application procedure. Students do not need to achieve set grades during this program, but need to successfully complete the program requirements and take an exam at the end of the three weeks. Tuition costs are covered for all LEO participants during the summer program. For more information, contact Melanie Rodriguez, Assoc. Director of Career Services, mcrodriguez@law.syr.edu

Texas Southern University
Special attention to non-quantifiable factors in addition to LSAT and GPA. Successful completion allows students to continue into first year.
Texas Tech University

A 4 week summer conditional admission program. Required courses change from year to year. Students receive credit for the summer classes. Approximately 20–25 students participate in the program. The Admissions Committee decides which students will be considered for this program and those that will be accepted for the program. It is designed for those with lower academic indicators, but additional information in the file indicates the ability to succeed in law school. There is no special application procedure. If accepted for the summer program, they must attend the summer program to proceed to the fall. There is no required grade point average from the summer to proceed to the fall. The current tuition rate is $334 for Texas residents and $580 for non-residents. Students will pay the current tuition rate and all tuition generated fees. Since these rates change from year to year, the applicant should check the university website for current information. The contact person for the program is Terence L. Cook, Assistant Dean for Admissions and Recruitment, terence.cook@ttu.edu.

Thomas M. Cooley Law School

The Professional Exploration Program (PEP) is a 5–8 day intensive program. This program is designed to give law school applicants who do not meet the minimum admissions requirements a chance to qualify for alternative admission. It also provides law school applicants the opportunity for self-exploration and discovery of strengths and weaknesses in their pursuit of a career. At the completion of the program, the students’ performance is evaluated by the PEP Committee. Students are notified by letter, three weeks after the program, as to the committee’s decision whether they’ve been offered admission to Thomas M. Cooley Law School.

University of Tulsa College of Law

All admitted first year law students have the option to begin law school in the summer. This program is not conditional.

Washburn University School of Law

Washburn Law participates in the Council for Legal Education Opportunity CLIC program, a national summer pre-law program. After finishing the program, up to five participants will be guaranteed admission to Washburn Law.

Widener University

A 6 week summer conditional admission program. Students are required to take two classes. Student participation varies from year to year. Criteria for admission is based on applicants who have displayed promise of success in legal studies even though they may have excelled in only one of the two principal standardized predictors of success—the Law School Admission Test and the undergraduate grade point average. The personal statement, letters of recommendation and all materials submitted in support of the application are considered. There is no special application procedure. Participants who obtain a 2.3 cumulative grade point average in the program are offered admission to the fall class. The cost of the program is $1000. Successful program participants receive a $5,000 renewable tuition scholarship upon their fall enrollment.

E. SCHOOLS PERMITTING PRE-SELECTION OF STUDENTS TO BE INTERVIEWED BY FIRMS

Schools listed below unless otherwise noted, permit firms interviewing on campus to pre-select 100% of the candidates they will interview. Only schools responding to the Wilson/Stern survey were included.

University of Alabama
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers pre-select candidates.

Albany Law School
On campus interviews are scheduled based on 100% employer prescreening.

American University

University of Arizona
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers are permitted to pre-select 100%.

Arizona State University
May pre-select 100%.

University of Arkansas—Little Rock

Atlanta’s John Marshall Law School

Baylor Law School

Boston College Law School
While employers may pre-select all candidates, they are strongly encouraged to participate in an interview lottery system to ensure that all interested students have a broad range of interviewing opportunities. Over 90% of employers participate in our lottery system.

Boston University School of Law
All students are permitted to submit to all employers. Employers preselect 100% of candidates for interviews.

Brooklyn Law School
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. While employers are permitted to pre-select 100% of the candidates, they are strongly encouraged to reserve interview slots for students ranked below their stated criteria so that a larger number of interested students have interviewing opportunities.

University of California—Davis

California Western University

Capital University

Benjamin N. Cardozo (Yeshiva)
Employers are permitted to pre-select 85%.

Case Western Reserve University
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers are permitted to pre-select 100%.

University of Colorado
Employers may pre-select but are encouraged to see all interested.

University of Connecticut
Permit pre-selection of students to be interviewed by firms.

Creighton University
Employers may pre-select but are encouraged to see all interested candidates.

University of Denver

DePaul University College of Law
Permit pre-selection of students to be interviewed by firms.

Drake University
Drake University does not permit firms to preselect 100% of the interview candidates unless this is the only way a firm will come. If this is the case, we allow them to do it, with notice to the students.

Duke University
Students rank the firms they are interested in interviewing with and the Office of Career and Professional Development arranges a schedule that accommodates as many of those requests as possible. Firms do not pre-select the students they interview with.

Duquesne University
Interviewed by firms. Employers are asked to select 75% of the interviews, 25% are selected through the lottery system.

Emory University

Florida Coastal School of Law
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. FCSL does permit pre-selection of students to be interviewed by firms based on criteria by the employer.

Florida International University
All students are permitted to submit for all employers. Employers are permitted to pre-select 100% of candidates whom they will interview.

H. WHAT SCHOOLS DO WITH MULTIPLE LSAT SCORES

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

University of Akron  If an applicant has multiple LSAT scores, we will consider the highest score.
University of Alabama  Highest score considered.
Albany Law School  Highest score considered.
American University  Admission Committee reviews all scores, but typically considers higher score for admission purposes.
Appalachian School of Law  Highest valid LSAT score taken.
University of Arizona  Most scores are averaged unless they are 10 points or more apart. If they are, we use the higher score.
Arizona State University  The highest score is used in all reporting and given more significant consideration. Admissions committee sees and reviews all scores.
College of Law  The Admissions Committee will see all reported scores and give substantial weight to the highest score.
University of Arkansas—Fayetteville  We take the highest of the final three scores.
Atlanta's John Marshall Law School  The Admissions Committee will see all reported scores and give substantial weight to the highest score.
University of Baltimore  Highest score used.
Baylor Law School  Highest score considered.
Boston College Law School  Adheres to the ABA policy of reporting the higher LSAT score, but considers all scores in the file review process. The admissions committee will consider addenda explaining differences in scores.
Boston University School of Law  Highest score considered.
University of Baltimore  If more than 7 points apart and GPA is 3.0 plus, take highest.
Brooklyn Law School  The Committee on Admissions sees all reported scores and give substantial weight to the highest score.
University at Buffalo School of Law  While the Admissions Committee will see all reported scores, we place considerably more weight on the highest LSAT score.
University of California—Berkeley  Take highest score.
University of California—Davis  The Admission Committee will use the high score for purposes of a final admission decision, however it has access to all scores earned within the past five years. In exceptional cases where there is a significant difference exists between scores, applicants may choose to provide a brief addendum of explanation. The highest score will be the recorded score in all reports and publications.
University of California—Hastings College of the Law  Highest score used.
University of California—Irvine  The admission committee will see all reported but will count the highest as the official score.
University of California—Los Angeles  Highest score with discretion of considering all.
California Western University  Most recent if highest, otherwise averaged.
Campbell University  We generally use the highest score; however, we do consider each individual score and any explanation offered for the lower score.
Capital University  Will consider highest score; generally, for three or more scores, the average is used. Explanations for differences welcome.

K. SCHOOLS USING A FORMULA IN THE ADMISSIONS PROCESS

Only those schools responding to the Wilson/Stern Survey are included.

These schools indicated that a formula is used for pre-sorting and as an aid in determining the process for considering the file but not for determining the decision.

The specific formula used by a law school is provided in cases where that information is available.

Such diversity is important in a law school, which must train its graduates not only to analyze and interpret the law, but also to reflect on competing viewpoints, advance arguments persuasively in a variety of forums, and develop policies affecting a broad range of people. Historically, Boalt Hall’s diverse student body has produced graduates who have served all segments of society and who have become leaders in many fields of law, including such varied fields as civil rights, corporate, environmental, criminal, intellectual property, and family law. Exposure to a wide array of ideas, outlooks, and experiences is an important part of our students’ educational and professional development.</td>

<td>As a public law school, the University of California, Hastings College of the Law has a responsibility to educate lawyers who will serve the legal needs of all members of society. Hastings seeks each year to enroll students whose intellect, experience, creativity, and personal character will enable them successfully to complete their own legal education, contribute to the education of their classmates, and become accomplished lawyers who serve the needs of the public through the practice of law, the formulation of public policy, legal scholarship, and other professional endeavors. Because numeric criteria do not necessarily indicate whether an applicant will meet or contribute to these goals, Hastings considers a variety of non numeric criteria. These criteria include letters of recommendation, academic honors and awards, the rigor and difficulty of the applicant’s undergraduate and graduate education, communications skills, work experience, public service, and significant achievement in other nonacademic activities. Hastings also considers whether the applicant is among the first in his or her family to attend college, is a member of groups that historically have been underrepresented in law school and the legal profession, or has experienced significant medical, personal, educational, or other adversity.</td>

At the College of Law, we seek diversity in students’ special talents, qualities, interests, socioeconomic and cultural backgrounds. Having students with different interests, goals, life experiences, and backgrounds is critical in order to ensure the robust exchange of ideas that is called for in training lawyers and potential leaders. Towards this end, we seek a student body that exhibits outstanding academic and professional promise with varied backgrounds and experience. DePaul University College of Law is also committed to improving the legal community by educating students who will serve the public and legal profession in ways that enhance the social, economic, cultural and ethical values in the broader community.</td>

<td>USF seeks to admit a diverse group of students who are among the most capable law students in the nation. We seek students who will work to promote the well-being of society, further the cause of justice domestically and abroad, and contribute to the common good. At USF there is no formula to guarantee admission. Instead we consider multiple factors, including an applicant’s undergraduate grade point average, LSAT score, undergraduate school, undergraduate course selection, and any graduate degrees. In addition, we consider past work experience, recommendations, community service, an applicant’s overall potential to render significant contributions to the legal profession, and diversity. Diversity is a core value of the law school, and, consistent with our mission, we aim to admit students from diverse backgrounds, including men and women of differing races, ethnicities, religions, sexual orientations, and ages as well as individuals with disabilities. Diversity enables students to learn from one another, promotes a variety of perspectives, and enhance sympathy and critical engagement. In particular, the law school has a goal of providing meaningful representation of historically underrepresented minorities, such as African Americans and Latinos. We recognize that, by virtue of our nation’s struggle with racial inequality, such students are both likely to have experiences of particular importance to the law school’s mission and are less likely to be admitted in meaningful numbers on criteria that ignore those experiences. To help us assess these qualities, applicants may submit an optional essay on diversity.</td>

UST Law's commitment to diversity is inseparable from its identity as a Catholic law school. Central to Catholic social teaching is the belief that every human being is made in the image of God, and that, reflecting the Trinitarian nature of God, human persons are social beings who thrive in community with others. As a Catholic university and the largest private institution of higher learning in Minnesota, the University of St. Thomas has both an extraordinary opportunity and a special responsibility to create and maintain a climate that affirms a diversity of people as well as diversity of views. The School of Law shares this opportunity and responsibility.</td>

Candidates admitted early decision are considered first for merit scholarships. Other types of financial aid are awarded later in February or March. Early decision is not recommended for candidates who need to know their full financial aid package before paying a deposit.

Full-tuition scholarship offered after early decision. After admission, on a rolling basis after FAFSA and need access report received by financial aid office.

Notification of merit scholarship in offer letter. Federal financial aid is offered after FAFSA is received and processed (same timeline as regular decision candidates).

In addition to being considered for the same need and merit-based scholarships available to all applicants, early decision applicants are exclusively eligible for four additional merit-based scholarships. See website for details.

After Admission, offer of admission is binding.

UConn Law gives some preference to CT residents, although it is NOT absolute. There is also some preference for residents of New England States without a public law school, so that covers all NE states but Maine. There is also a tuition benefit for CT residents and the New England students mentioned above. We have no limits of goals re: residency. We seek a geographically diverse class.

| Creighton University                            | Yes     | J.D./M.B.A.—The School of Law and the College of Business Administration offer a coordinated program leading to the separate conferral of both the Juris Doctor and Master of Business Administration degrees. This innovative program allows students to obtain both degrees at a lower cost and in less time than would be required if each degree were earned separately.
The JD/MS in Government Organization and Leadership (GOAL) joint degree program prepares students for leadership positions with government entities and the organizations that work closely with them. Students gain an invaluable mix of career-driven legal experience and professional subtleties that can't be learned from a textbook. They will see the inner workings of our nation’s capital. This program allows students to obtain both degrees at a lower cost and in less time than would be required if each degree were earned separately.
J.D./M.S. in Negotiation and Dispute Resolution—The School of Law and the Werner Institute for Negotiation and Dispute Resolution offer a coordinated program leading to the separate conferral of both the Juris Doctor and Master of Science in Negotiation and Dispute Resolution degrees. This program allows students to obtain both degrees at a lower cost and in less time than would be required if each degree were earned separately.  The Werner Institute is one of the premier programs of its kind in the nation and the location of this interdisciplinary program within the Law School allows students pursuing both degrees the opportunity to simultaneously leverage the strengths of the Law School and the Institute. |

Students participating in a joint degree program will only take JD courses their first two semesters. Starting the summer after their 1L year, they will begin masters courses in their designated program. All masters programs require a separate application/acceptance to the specific institution/program. A student cannot have over ½ of the masters degree credit requirements fulfilled at the time of declaration of a joint degree. 9 credits from the masters degree program count toward the student’s JD and 9 credits from the JD program count towards the masters degree. |

<td>Regent University School of Law</td>
<td>No new three year programs, but we added a new Two-Year Accelerated Program-launching May 2013 Students save considerable time and living expenses while earning the same academically rigorous Regent legal education taught from a Christian worldview. Students will enter the job market one year sooner than students in a traditional 3-year program. Students study full-time for six consecutive terms by starting in late May as opposed to mid-August. After the first summer, accelerated program students are integrated into the same classes as all other law students, studying the same curriculum under the same professors as enjoyed by students in the traditional three-year program. Students will experience a law-practice externship as a part of the Accelerated Program. Due to a rigorous schedule, students will have less opportunity for extracurricular activities and summer employment. Requires at least a 152 LSAT, a 3.0 cumulative UGPA, and other indicators of high academic promise. Applications and supporting documents should be submitted via the LSAC website. Priority consideration date for the two-year program is January 15. Late applications are considered on a space-available basis. Students admitted to the program must submit an enrollment agreement and seat deposit no later than April 1. It is recommended that applicants take the October or December LSAT preceding the desired June enrollment. Applicants must submit an addendum in their application addressing their reasons for seeking enrollment in an accelerated, rigorous program of study. The admissions committee will be looking for a commitment to disciplined, intensive legal study.</td>

| University of St. Thomas School of Law (MN) | Each year we have new donor funded scholarships available for students. We also have a new Dean's Public Service Scholarship which is a guaranteed 20% annual scholarship for students who have completed a minimum of one year of service with a qualifying organization. The Access to Justice Scholars program is a $75,000 scholarship program for individuals who have an interest in and commitment to pursuing legal practice in a small-town or rural setting. Through the program, UST School of Law works with the Minnesota State Bar Association to match Access to Justice scholars with a mentor experienced in small-town or rural practice. All academically qualified applicants are invited to submit an essay explaining their interest in, and commitment to, pursuing legal practice in a small-town or rural setting. The essay should be submitted with the application for admission. Applicants will be invited to interview with a faculty admissions committee. Awardees are granted $25,000 or the equivalent percentage of tuition each year of the three-year J.D. program. |

<td>Diversity Statement: Optional. This essay is your opportunity to discuss any aspect of your background or life experience that you believe will enhance your ability to contribute to the diverse BU classroom experience and community. BU Law values and recognizes the importance of diversity. An ethnically, socio-economically, and otherwise diverse class is essential to the education of each student. As a producer of leaders in legal practice, government or other public service, academia, and business, BU Law continues its long-standing tradition of providing opportunities for persons of all backgrounds and providing the excellent training to which a diverse classroom is indispensable.</td>

LIBERTY UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW

a) Resumé: Recommended.

b) Personal Statement: Required—Applicants are required to provide a personal statement as part of their Application for Admission. Personal statements must be typed double-spaced, using a 12-point font. Optimal length is four pages, but the number of pages is optional. Applicants should address each of the points below, in order of preference. In addition, applicants may wish to present information regarding family background, educational opportunities, financial resources, etc., that may have affected their academic performance or test scores. Applicants should address these 5 points in their personal statement:

1. Calling: Why do you want to be a lawyer? Describe your personal and professional goals.
2. Mission: Explain your reasons for applying to Liberty University School of Law. Include your perspective on faith, life, and morality, and why the law school’s distinct mission is attractive to you.
3. Talents: Share any personal talents, strengths, character traits, and interests that contribute to your preparation to study and practice law.
4. Experience: What educational, employment, and life experiences have contributed to your preparation for the study of law? (Scholastic, civic, and professional honors or awards may be cited here or in your optional résumé.)
   - Influences: Discuss particular factors that have had a significant impact on your personal, professional, or spiritual growth, or your vision for the future.

c) Diversity Statement: n/a.

d) Unique Statement for your school: See personal statement requirements.

e) Additional Essays:

f) Letters of Recommendation: Required. Two letters of recommendation are required. One recommendation (preferably from a faculty advisor or professor in major field of study) should address applicant’s academic performance and abilities. If the applicant has been out of school for several years or has served in the military, a letter from an employer or commanding officer is appropriate. The second recommendation should be a character reference from someone who has personal knowledge of the applicant’s integrity. Letters of recommendation from family members or from “VIPs” lacking personal knowledge of you are of no value. Recommenders may send letters to the Law School Admission Council (LSAC) or directly to the School of Law Office of Admissions.

g) Addenda—areas of content: n/a.

Specific Course Questions

1. In addition to the 1L writing and research requirements, are there other writing requirements beyond the first year?

2. Is there a “lawyering,” practical skills course included at some point in course of study? If so, when and what is covered in the course?

3. Does your school offer a bar preparation course? If so, when? Is it mandatory?

ALBANY LAW SCHOOL

Q1. Yes. There is an upper-level writing requirement where students must produce a substantial legal research paper prior to graduation. This requirement may be met in various ways including but not limited to: faculty supervised research, publication in a student-edited journal, or the completion of a course that satisfies the writing requirement.

Q2. Yes. “Introduction to Lawyering” is taken in the first semester for all new students. The course combines legal research, legal writing, clinical methodology, and professional skills development to introduce what lawyers do and how the legal system works. Students also represent a plaintiff or defendant in a simulated lawsuit, from initial client interview to appeal.

Q3. Yes. Bar exam preparation and support is comprehensive. There are courses directly related to bar preparation that are offered in the 2L and 3L years. All students must take a diagnostic exam after their first year. If they score below median, they must take Legal Analysis I—a course designed as a bridge between 1L doctrinal courses and preparing for the bar exam as a 3L. This course is not required if they score above the median on the diagnostic, but is available to all 2L students. There is also a Legal Analysis II which is made available to all students in their final semester, but it is not mandatory. Legal Analysis II uses former bar exam questions and is designed as a direct segue from law school to full participation in a commercial bar review course. All graduating students are offered a bar coach and provided opportunities for individual appointments, essay and performance test workshops, as well as opportunities to practice with former essay graders for the New York Board of Law Examiners. Faculty members host daily Q&A lunches during the months preceding the February and July bar exams where students are invited to have a meal and ask questions that may be raised by their commercial bar preparation courses.

UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS SCHOOL OF LAW

Q1. Yes. Every student is required to complete at least 2 credit hours of upper level writing coursework. ULW courses are certified by the faculty as meeting relevant ABA standards.

Q2. We have several experiential learning courses that incorporate lawyering skills simulations, including Arbitration, Mediation, Business Lawyering Skills, Child Welfare Practice, Construction Law Practice, Crime & the Supreme Court, Interviewing, Counseling & Negotiating, and Trial Advocacy. LAWW 5213. Business Lawyering Skills. Provides practical skills instruction through exercises that simulate business client interviews, negotiations, mediation, and arbitration. Multiple written projects are also involved.

Q3. Yes. We offer two bar preparation courses during the three-year course of study (Mastering Legal Analysis and Multistate Substance and Strategies), as well as a series of post-graduation workshops during the summer and winter bar preparation periods. Neither the courses nor the workshops are mandatory.

UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS—LITTLE ROCK

Q1. Yes.

Q2. Yes, it is required during the second year.

Q3. Yes, Bar preparation courses during law school and a bar preparation program after graduation. It is not mandatory.

UNIVERSITY AT BUFFALO SCHOOL OF LAW

Q1. Under the School of Law’s Legal Analysis, Writing and Research (LAWR) program, all students complete a 10-credit, three-semester LAWR curriculum, with two semesters in their first year and a third semester during their second year. The Third Semester builds on the foundation established in LAWR I and II, and acts as the capstone of the LAWR program.

Q2. Yes, lawyering/practice skills components are built into our LAWR program.

Q3. Yes, LAW 625LEC—Bar Exam Strategies & Skills is offered to upper-level students each spring. It is not mandatory, but highly recommended.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA—LOS ANGELES

| Q1. | Yes. Students must undertake a Substantial Analytic Writing (SAW) project during their second or third year of law school. |
| Q2. | Yes. Students take Legal Research and Writing during their first year, which focuses on practice-oriented legal analysis. During this yearlong course students develop the analytic skill set needed by practicing lawyers and desired by legal employers. Students are introduced to fundamentals of legal reasoning, the structure of objective and persuasive arguments, effective written analysis, legal research methods, statutory interpretation, compelling oral advocacy, fact investigation, client counseling, and negotiation. These analytic skills are taught using the clinical method, with the client’s perspective firmly in mind and with the students learning by acting as lawyers. By learning how to function as practicing lawyers, students can succeed in their summer jobs, and in their careers when they graduate. |
| Q3. | No, however, UCLA Law offers regular academic courses covering material that is tested on the bar exam including Business Associations, Civil Procedure, Community Property, Constitutional Law, Contracts, Criminal Law and Procedure, Evidence, Professional Responsibility, Real Property, Remedies, Torts, Trusts and Wills and Succession. Students with a GPA of below 3.1 at the conclusion of their first year are particularly encouraged (and in some cases required) to take courses offered in the second and third year on subjects tested on the bar exam. In addition, third year students may take an “Early Bird Bar Program.” Taught in combination with a commercial bar provider, a UCLA Law professor specializing in academic support teaches six bar exam workshops during the spring semester. These workshops focus on developing an approach to bar essays, performance tests, and multiple choice questions that will allow students to apply their knowledge in the way that the bar examiners award most highly. |

CHICAGO—KENT COLLEGE OF LAW

Q1. Chicago—Kent has a five-semester legal research and writing requirement.
Q2. Chicago—Kent’s in-house legal clinic introduces students to the experience of working on litigation and transactional matters while exposing students to real-world experience within a “teaching law firm,” allowing students to begin their experiential legal careers learning from experienced practitioners.
Q3. Yes. Chicago-Kent is committed to providing students with the academic foundation necessary for success on the bar exam. The faculty provides a list of recommended courses to help upper-level law students select electives in areas likely to be tested on the exam and hosts a series of bar readiness review sessions for 3L students on key bar subjects. The law school also offers an Intensive Essay Writing Lab for students the law school identifies as needing additional assistance sharpening the analytic and writing skills needed for practice as well as for success on the bar exam.

CONCORDIA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW

Q1. Our students are required to complete our Advanced Writing Requirement prior to graduation. Pursuant to the Advanced Writing Requirement, students must take at least one additional advanced writing course. Such courses include: Advanced Appellate Advocacy, Intensive Legal Writing, Judicial Writing, Legislative Drafting, Litigation Planning & Drafting, Logic & Narrative, Motion Practice, and Rhetoric.
Q2. The practice of law requires a skillset all its own. That is why Concordia University School of Law offers an extensive range of practicums to provide students with opportunities to develop the professional skills that they will need in practice. This integration of theory and practice prepares students for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession at all levels. Each practicum course provides simulated, hands-on experiences so students can practice and refine their skills and apply the principles developed in a more traditional casebook course.
Q3. Yes. It is offered every fall and spring semester. All students are encouraged to take the course the semester before graduation. It is however strongly encouraged for students below a 2.8 LGPA.

DEPAUL UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF LAW

Q1. LEGAL ANALYSIS RESEARCH AND COMMUNICATION III: Builds on the analysis, research, and communication skills established in LEGAL ANALYSIS RESEARCH AND COMMUNICATION I & II in the first year, and focuses on appellate brief writing and oral advocacy skills.
Q2. Students must complete at least six credit hours of experiential education courses from a list of approved courses. For the most current list of approved experiential learning courses, please visit https://law.depaul.edu/academics/jd-programs/Pages/requirements.aspx.
Q3. DePaul College of Law’s Director of Bar Passage provides students with workshops and individual counseling to assist in bar exam preparation. The Director also teaches an elective capstone course each spring that provides graduating students with in-depth training in legal analysis and exam-taking strategies for the bar exam.

DICKINSON LAW

Q1. Dickinson Law requires students to take Problem Solving 3: The Lawyer As Persuader, a persuasive writing course, in the first semester of their second year. Additionally, students are required to take a writing intensive seminar in any of the final three semesters of law school.

Q2. Yes, Dickinson Law requires 1Ls to take a 3-credit course called Legal Argument & Factual Persuasion, which is offered in the first semester of the first year of law school. This course systematically introduces how lawyers develop a legal argument using a) case precedents, and b) statutes, including various interpretive tools beyond the language of the statute. The course also will instruct how to find these authorities through legal research. Students also will learn the very different protocol a lawyer uses when attempting to persuade the judge or jury to accept her version of disputed facts, culminating in every student presenting a closing argument to the jury.

Q3. Yes, Dickinson Law offers a bar preparation course (Fundamental Skills for the Bar Examination) in the final semester of law school. While open to all third year students, this course is mandatory for students who rank in the bottom quarter of their law school class after the second semester of law school and who earned a grade below C in any first-year course.

ELON LAW

Q1. Elon Law has an upper-level writing requirement, which must be completed by all law students during their second or third year as a graduation requirement. The goals of the upper-level writing requirement are: (1) to further develop students’ basic writing and research skills; (2) to provide students with an opportunity to analyze, synthesize, and organize a substantial body of knowledge; and (3) to provide students with an opportunity for in-depth engagement in a narrow legal subject area. A student satisfies the requirement by completing one or more written projects that require rigorous intellectual effort. Projects must be completed under the active and regular supervision of a faculty member who provides instruction, guidance, and feedback on the student’s work, and who is available for individual meetings to discuss the student’s progress toward successful completion of the requirement. The requirement can be met by writing, among other things, a scholarly paper, a law review note or comment, legal briefs or memoranda, or other legal documents. Beyond this requirement, many students complete rigorous writing projects in activities such as law review, moot court and numerous courses where a paper is required.

Q2. Elon Law’s curriculum includes a full-time, course-connected residency-in-practice for every student during the winter or spring trimester of their second year in law school. Residencies give students valuable experience, deepening their knowledge, skill and judgment. They create the opportunity for partnerships between Elon Law and the practicing bar and bench, unlike any working relationship in the profession. Through residencies, judges and lawyers shape the future of the profession of law. They teach future colleagues about the ethics, professionalism, knowledge, skill and judgment essential to the profession’s relevance and effectiveness in society. Unlike typical summer programs, residencies enable supervising judges and lawyers to benefit from student assistance throughout the year, allowing legal organizations to spread out their engagement with law students. In their residency, second-year law students work 32–36 hours a week over a 10-week trimester. Students work with their judge or attorney supervisor and a faculty member to create a learning plan for their residency. The learning plan includes developing the student’s increased proficiency in at least two legal skills and in an area of law practice. Beyond the Residency program, Elon students are still encouraged to engage in internships during their two summers in law school.

Q3. Elon Law students take a required Bar Exam Foundations course during their final trimester. The course is designed to help students maximize their performance on the bar exam in their jurisdiction of choice. In addition to reviewing and organizing critical bar-tested topics and to assisting students develop expert study strategies, the course focuses on the tactics and strategies for writing essay answers and taking multiple choice tests. UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI—KANSAS CITY

Q1. There is one Research & Writing requirement beyond the first year. It usually consists of a 25 page analytical paper but the requirement can also be satisfied by a Law Review Comment or a Moot Court brief.

Q2. Our first year course, often called “Research & Writing” at many schools, is called Lawyering Skills here. Beyond that, UMKC offers a number of courses that touch on different pieces of lawyering skills, such as American Legal Research, Introduction to American Legal Skills, Introduction to American Law and Culture, Negotiating Mergers & Acquisitions, Mediation, and Client Counseling.

Q3. UMKC offers several bar preparation courses. All students may participate in the UMKC Bar Prep Program, which supplements their commercial provider’s course during their actual bar preparation. The focus is on strategies and tactics to handle bar questions and on essay strategies. UMKC offers a semester course in bar preparation and skill-building in all styles of bar questions. Recently, a new mini-course was added that focuses solely on building MBE skills. The semester course is mandatory only for students that have previously been dismissed and have been readmitted to the law school. It is strongly recommended for students in the bottom quartile of the class.

NEW ENGLAND LAW | BOSTON

Q1. Students are required to take Legal Research and Writing III during the fall semester of their second year.

Q2. The Lawyering Experience (TLE) is a required program of weekly sessions designed to aid students in their first year of law school to identify and pursue appropriate professional career paths. TLE faculty, career services experts, alumni, and others join students in weekly exercises aimed at developing job-seeking skills, such as interviewing and networking; sessions also are designed to heighten awareness of the legal, personal, and lifestyle demands of various law careers.

Q3. Advanced Legal Analysis is a required course designed to help students transition from law school to the legal profession. Students are only eligible for this class in their final semester of law school. Advanced Legal Analysis will use a problem-solving approach to teach legal analysis and writing skills that are critical to new lawyers’ success in the profession and on the bar examination. Students will receive instruction, guidance, and feedback to refine foundational, legal-analysis skills that are tested on all state bar examinations and useful for beginning practitioners. Substantively, the course will focus on core multistate bar exam subjects: civil procedure, constitutional law, contracts, property, evidence, torts, and criminal law and procedure. In addition to bar exam test-taking skills, students will learn time-management skills and effective study techniques to help them succeed on the bar exam. The course exposes each student to all bar examination testing formats, including essays, performance tests, and multiple-choice questions. The final grade will be based on completion of assigned work, including in-class exercises, out-of-class assignments, tests, class participation, and a graded final exam, administered during the exam period. Designed to simulate the bar exam, the final exam will consist of multiple-choice, short-answer, and essay questions.

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Q1. Yes, the University of South Carolina School of Law requires that all students complete a substantial legal research project that is either in the form of a law review article, brief, or memorandum or Law prepared under the supervision of a faculty member, reaching the length of 30 to 50 pages, that receives a grade of at least a C. A brief submitted during moot court competition may satisfy this requirement if it is critiqued and approved by a supervising faculty member and it reaches at least 30 pages in length. Additionally, the writing requirement may be met through approval of the Curriculum Committee when the paper involves legal writing and reaches the traditional 30–50 pages in length. More details can be found in the student handbook under degree requirements here: https://sc.edu/study/colleges_schools/law/internal/current_students/handbook/index.php.

Q2. Yes, students must meet the upper level course requirements which include: a Professional Responsibility course, six credits of Experiential Courses, a Perspective Course, and the Writing Requirement. These courses are intended to expand the student’s substantive knowledge of basic subject matter; expand the student’s range of legal skills; expand the student’s perspective on law and the legal process; permit the intensive pursuit of specialized subjects by the student; permit faculty to teach courses related to areas of individual research, interest, and expertise; and allow for experimentation in subject matter and pedagogical methods. The six credits of Experiential Courses provide practical “lawyering” skills in which students must receive a grade of C or better or pass courses graded on a pass/fail basis. These courses are completed in the second and third year. More details can be found in the student handbook under degree requirements here: https://sc.edu/study/colleges_schools/law/internal/current_students/handbook/index.php.

Q3. Yes, the Academic Success Program provides workshops and advice to third year students on how to study and pass the bar exam. There is a Barbri Course offered after May graduation, but this is not mandatory.

ST. JOHN’S UNIVERSITY

Q1. Yes. There is an advanced practice writing requirement.

Q2. Lawyering is offered in the January pre-session during 1L year. This course introduces students to the basic skills of lawyering, focusing on negotiation and incorporating interviewing, client counseling, and contract drafting. Taught in an intensive format emphasizing simulations, exercises, and other forms of experiential learning, the course immerses students in both the theoretical bases and the practical application of the skills required for effective, ethical lawyering.

Q3. APPLIED LEGAL ANALYSIS PARTS I & II (STATE AND FEDERAL PRACTICE – 3070/3080) 3 credits each.

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY—BEASLEY SCHOOL OF LAW

Q1. Students are required to fulfill Temple Law’s Upper Level Writing Requirement by completing coursework focusing on 1) Serial Writing and 2) Research Writing.

Q2. Temple Law offers numerous practical skills courses which are designated as Experiential/Professional Skills. All students must successfully complete one or more experiential courses totaling at least six credit hours. These classes can be taken at any time provided the student has completed the mandatory first-year curriculum and any other applicable pre-requisite courses. Additionally, the first-year curriculum includes “Litigation Basics” and “Introduction to Transactional Skills” which are courses that introduce first-year students to lawyering in those two areas.

Q3. Temple Law offers a class entitled “Survey of Legal Topics” which is designed to begin preparation for the bar exam, both the multistate/multiple-choice section (“the MBE”) and the essay and performance test questions. This course is not mandatory and is offered to all students in the spring semester.

WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY

Q1. A student, in order to receive a degree, must, during his or her second year, complete a research and writing project under the direct supervision of a member of the Faculty or a Dean. Satisfactory completion of the requirement will be demonstrated by certification from the instructor who supervises the project. To satisfy the requirement a writing project must require thorough legal research, a substantial piece of legal writing, and rewriting in response to criticism from the supervising instructor. The requirement may be satisfied by an Independent Research Project or a law journal note if the above standards are met. The requirement may also be met by satisfactory completion of a paper meeting the above standards and submitted as part of the regular work in designated courses or seminars.
Q2. All students complete a Skills Immersion (2 credit) course at the beginning of their fall 3L term. Students can choose to complete either the Business or the Litigation Skills Immersion. The course is a 2 week intensive overview of the selected topic.
Q3. While a bar preparation course is not mandatory, W&L has a robust academic success program. For students who, based on their 1L fall law school performance, it is determined would benefit from enhanced instruction, there is a requirement to participate in Legal Reasoning during 1L spring, a course normally to be taught by the professor supervising the Academic Success Program. Students in approximately the bottom 10% of their class at the end of their 1L year will be, during their 2L fall semester, (a) required to participate in Legal Method, a course normally to be taught by the professor supervising the Academic Support Program; and (b) required to take one bar exam course. (see list at http://catalog.wlu.edu/preview_program.php?catoid=21&poid=1103) Please note that the list excludes the two bar courses we already require, Constitutional Law and Evidence.

<td>University of Pennsylvania Carey Law School</td>
<td>The Penn Law Outreach Program was founded in 2007 by leadership in the Penn Black Law Students Association, who saw a need to provide information for and exposure to the law school admission process, law school, and the legal field to undergraduates in the Greater Philadelphia area. The Outreach Program, “Applying to and Succeeding in Law School”, focuses on students who are ethnically diverse, first-generation college attendees, or who have disadvantaged backgrounds, and aims to help them successfully complete their bachelor’s degrees, and apply to and enter law school. Over four sessions held on Saturdays throughout the spring semester, program participants come to Penn Law’s campus and meet with a range of students, professors, and staff to learn about the law school experience, how to prepare their applications, and what kinds of career opportunities they might pursue in varied legal practice areas. Participants are also paired with Penn Law students who act as mentors for the duration of the program.</td>
